

Brett King is Vice President, Creative Programming, Diversity & Inclusion for Sony Pictures Entertainment, where he works with both Sony Pictures Television and the Motion Picture Group to identify and advantage opportunities for inclusion throughout the studio.

King oversees the Sony Pictures Television Diverse Directors Program as well as the television studio's Diverse Writers program, both designed to provide opportunity for women and ethnic minorities in scripted episodic television. Prior to working with Sony, King was a producer as well as a Program Consultant for HBOAccess and for Disney/ABC Television Creative Talent Development, working to find the next generation of content creators.

A television veteran with oversight of literally hundreds of hours of television under his belt, he has been a senior level executive at BET, The WB, Paramount Television Studios and 20th Century Fox Television. His executive career followed his work in New York, where he was a staff producer of the commercial parodies at Saturday Night Live as well as a producer of innumerable music videos, commercials and promos, all while moonlighting as a DJ in some of the city's seminal downtown clubs.

King is a proud father of two.
